The right words matter!

Bringing together researchers, community members, patients, caregivers, and the NHS let's discuss engagement with medicines and how we can improve our current systems and perceptions.

There are multiple barriers to getting the right medical help for us.

The loo<sup>o</sup>ng phone preamble

TIME is AGAINST us.

Medical professionals have a HUGE role to fill, made ever more difficult with budget-cuts, staff shortages and bureaucratic decisions that impact their ability.

But there may be tools to develop to help them and their patients.

when medication is prescribed where is the information held?

Continuing training staff in effective methods of communicating with patients so they feel reassured and listened to.

Especially around neurodivergencies and english as a second language.

How do we make sure people who come to live here can get the help they need

BEEP BOOP
AI is not safe or reliable enough to replace this information with appropriate medical guidance

And is this helpful? Or does a list of side effects and legal jargon make people CONFUSED, SCARED and TIRED...
Good luck!
